

Chicago Manual of Style is most often used for information science journals. The authoritative source is The Chicago Manual of Style, 15th ed. (2003), call number Z 253 .U69 2003. It can be found in The Ames Library 1st floor Reference Collection.

Sections 16 and 17 of the Manual provide directions for citing sources. Additional directions are available from the Chicago Manual of Style FAQ (and not so FAQ) web site at <http://www.press.uchicago.edu/Misc/Chicago/cmosfaq.html>.

A bibliography prepared using The Chicago Manual of Style should be single-spaced, with second and subsequent lines of each entry indented two spaces.

IN-TEXT REFERENCES

Use either footnotes (at the bottom of each page) or endnotes (at the end of your paper) to cite your sources.

Endnotes are a better option if your citations or notes are long; you don't want to overbalance the text.

Guidelines:

1. Material necessary for understanding the argument should be included in the text; only secondary information should be included in the citation.
2. If you cite the same source twice in a row, you do not have to include two full citations. The second citation can be represented as "Ibid," but make sure to include a page, paragraph or section number:
Ibid, p. 164
Ibid, par. 3

Endnotes/footnotes include most of the same information one would use in a bibliography, but are presented in a slightly different format. Numbers before the citation indicate the endnote/footnote number.

Note that the cited page number, if applicable, is given after all the other necessary information.

For more examples, please see the Chicago Manual of Style.
